

Make a binding beneficiary nomination

Completing this form ensures your super goes to the right people.

If you don't nominate any beneficiaries, your money will be distributed according to Qantas Super's rules and Australian superannuation law. You can make a non-binding beneficiary nomination by logging into your account.

Please complete all sections in BLOCK letters using a black or blue pen. Only original copies will be accepted. Do NOT use liquid paper or whiteout. All corrections must be initialled by you.

Who can I nominate? Legally, your super can only be left to dependants (see below). If the people you want to nominate are not in the following categories please see section 3 on the next page.

Dependants: There are only four valid types

Spouse
Includes married, de facto, and same sex

Children
Includes biological, step, adopted, ex-nuptial or your spouse's children. Payments to adult children may be subject to tax.

Financial dependant
A person wholly or partially financially dependent on you

Interdependent
A person who you live with in a close personal relationship where one or both provide financial support and domestic support, or personal care. Other circumstances may apply.

Legal personal representative

The legal executor of your will or the person responsible for your estate. If you wish to leave your super to a non-dependant, you can put it in your will and then nominate your legal personal representative on this form.

2 Nominate

Please nominate who you want your super benefits paid to in the event of your death. You can nominate one or more dependants and/or your legal personal representative/s.

3 How can I make sure my loved ones are protected?

Can I leave my super to friends, non-dependent family members or charity?

Yes. But only by nominating your legal personal representative on this form so that your super is paid in accordance with your will. You should make sure your will is kept up to date. Non-dependent beneficiary payments may also be subject to tax.

What happens if I don't nominate anyone?

If you die without nominating chosen recipients, Qantas Super will distribute your money to a dependant or legal personal representative. Dependants are given priority and we will usually transfer funds to your estate if there is no other option.

Can I change a nomination?

You can renew, cancel or make a new nomination at any time by filling out and submitting a new nomination. We recommend updating your nomination if your circumstances change, for example, marriage, divorce or children.

Who do I tell about my nominations?

It's a good idea to make sure your beneficiaries know your super fund account details to make the claim process easier.

Do I need to update my binding nomination?

Binding nominations need to be updated every three years. We will remind you before the expiry of your nomination.
