

Make a reversionary binding beneficiary nomination (for income accounts only)

Completing this form ensures your super goes to the right people. If you don't nominate any beneficiaries, your money will be distributed according to Qantas Super's rules and Australian superannuation law. You can make a non-binding beneficiary nomination by logging into your account online.

Please complete all sections in BLOCK letters using a black or blue pen. Only original copies will be accepted. Do NOT use liquid paper or whiteout. All corrections must be initialled by you.

What does 'reversionary' mean?

A 'reversionary' nomination means your beneficiary will continue to receive the income payments from your income account. This is different to a standard binding nomination, where your beneficiary receives your death benefit as a lump sum. There is a separate form for standard binding nominations.

Your reversionary beneficiary can choose to receive the balance of your income account as a lump sum withdrawal if they prefer.

3 How can I make sure my loved ones are protected?

Can I leave my super to friends, non-dependent family members or charity?

Yes. But only by nominating your legal personal representative on a standard binding beneficiary form so that your super is paid in accordance with your will. You can only nominate your spouse or dependent child as your reversionary beneficiary.

What happens if I don't nominate anyone?

If you die without nominating a beneficiary, Qantas Super will distribute your money to a dependant or legal personal representative. Dependants are given priority and we will usually transfer funds to your estate if there is no other option.

Can I change a nomination?

You can renew, cancel or make a new nomination at any time by filling out and submitting a new nomination. We recommend updating your nomination if your circumstances change, for example, marriage or divorce.

Who do I tell about my nominations?

It's a good idea to make sure your beneficiary knows your super fund account details to make the claim process easier.

Do I need to update my binding nomination?

Reversionary binding nominations need to be updated every three years. We will remind you before the expiry of your nomination.
